Burlington County Demographic Data

Decennially, between 1960 and 2000, in addition to collecting quantitative data about each household resident's name, address, sex, relationship and age, the Census Bureau asked between 10% and 16% of households to complete a longer form to collect additional qualitative data about residents' place of birth, ethnicity, language, education, employment type, income, housing, etc. To conserve resources, Congress eliminated this practice for the 2010 decennial census. The US Census Bureau's American Community Survey (ACS), however, continues to collect and analyze these data for some regions, such as Burlington County, and to publish its estimated results every three to five years. Often, ACS estimates are different than the decennial figures. Instead of adjusting them and adding to the confusion, the Commission tables show ACS's 2009 qualitative estimates. The Commission will revise these data when ACS publishes its revised estimates.
